HISTORICAL NOTE

Photographers for the Ford Motor Company Photographic Department recorded the company's evolution as an automotive manufacturer and the company's contributions to a revolutionary era of discovery and invention. They traveled throughout the country depicting branch plants and throughout the world documenting the company's expansion abroad. Photographers captured on motion picture and still film processes for acquiring raw materials as well as the air, sea, and land network of transportation that connected raw material with the manufacturing plants; all phases of production in two world wars; and company officials, employees, and visiting dignitaries.

Negatives that photographers produced were arranged in a straight sequence of numbers beginning with number 1. Photographic prints were mounted on linen and albums were created that filed images into subject groupings. While no identification was recorded on the print beyond negative number, the negative log was used to record a brief description and date. Individual photographers were not listed in the log or with the image until the 1940s, but a photographer's name was often written on the envelope housing the negative.

SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE

The series is comprised of photographic prints and negatives created by the Ford Motor Company's first photographic department. Subjects cover all company activities from 1913 to 1954, with an emphasis on products, plants, and manufacturing processes. The photographic prints, arranged by topic, were removed from albums by archivists and housed in acid free folders; original topical order (non-alphabetical) was maintained.

Subjects include Ford Motor Company plants, both foreign and domestic; manufacturing processes for Ford, Lincoln and Mercury automobiles; significant runs of trucks, buses, and tractors; the production of war material including airplanes, boats, munitions and vehicles; photographs of engineering parts drawings, production and instruction manuals; company visitors; personnel and employees including union activities; Ford Motor Company related schools such as apprentice schools, trade schools, army, navy, and air training schools; and images of Henry Ford, Edsel Ford, the Ford grandchildren, and the Ford Fair Lane estate.

The series also includes a small run of photographs of a Ford plant in Mexico City that are attributed to Frida Kahlo (see Box 1), and images of Diego Rivera working on the Detroit industry murals at the Detroit Institute of Arts (see Box 322).

Negatives are arranged chronologically by negative number; a negative log briefly identifies individual photographs.

Researchers should note that a large number of the images in this series were copied, and that copies were filed in Accession 1660, Photographic Prints Vertical File series.

ARRANGEMENT

The photographic prints are arranged by topic in the non-alphabetical order established by the photographic department. Folder numbers correspond to the original album numbers. Negatives are not included in the container list.
